ONLINE WORKSHOP

Publication Ethics, Misconduct and Predatory Journals

Publication ethics is fundamental to maintaining the integrity, credibility, and quality of scholarly communication. This session will explore the key principles of ethical publishing, common forms of research and publication misconduct, including plagiarism, data fabrication, falsification, and redundant publication, as well as the challenges posed by predatory journals. It will highlight best practices for identifying unethical publishing practices, evaluating journal credibility, and promoting transparency, accountability, and responsible editorial decision-making.

Objectives

- To understand the principles of publication ethics and research integrity.
- To identify common forms of publication misconduct and their implications.
- To recognise predatory journals and distinguish them from legitimate scholarly publications.
- To familiarise participants with best practices for ethical editorial and publishing processes.
- To promote transparency, accountability, and responsible publishing practices among editors and researchers.
